Catching a Cardinal.-Harlowe's Kemble picture, the trial scene of Queen Katherine, was painted in the theatre. Mrs Siddons had sat to him for Lady Macbeth reading the letter, but would not sit again; nor John at all; he had promised Lawrence, and, beside, called Harlewe "somewhat of a puppy." Admiring his genius, finding no fault with his character, still he thought the painter wild, eccentric, and somewhat of a puppy. Harlowe knew himself avoided; that, not our tragedian's dislike, annoyed him; for he wanted but a finishing touch of expression to perfect his Wolsey; he wished for one look of chilling scorn, and resolved to earn it. Mr T. Welsh, for whom the picture was painting, promised to achieve a meeting; but feared that, even though it must be against Kemble's will, he would be civil. Harlowe determined to put good temper and courtesy out of his power. The actor was invited to a party at the composer's, unprepared for encountering the artist; who, however, came, and in some fantastic foreign uniform. He beset Kemble with all sorts plies, though cold and laconic, were polite; the actor stubbornly banishing animation from his countenance, as much as possible. At last Harlowe said, " I shall flatter your sister, in the queen ; I don't like her acting of the part; she appears not to understand it at There he triumphed! Then the face began to move, 'to vulture,' and, though Kemble only exclaimed "Umph! re—ally, sir?"—it was enough "I see it, I have it!" shouted Harlowe; my dear sir, a thousdinal!" And on his canvass he imprest the air of freezing disdain, which was indeed not easily called to the features of John Kemble in private life.

THEORY TONE NEWS WE WIND TO SEE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 1836.

The Law of Libel .- The Greenfield Mercury continues its efforts to sustain the judicial libel law.

We have stated that the common law libel law never existed in this Province prior to 1780, when the State Constitution was adopted; that the criminal law of libel never existed in this State until Judge Parsons interpolated it upon our code, and that his law and the law of the present judges on that subject, are not the English common law libel law-and that if the common law or any other libel law had existed in the Province before the adoption of our Constitution, the unrestrained liberty of the press, secured by that instrument, abrogated it. The Mercury, to prove the existence of the English common law libel law in this Province, cited the trial of one John Peter Zenger, who was tried for a libel at common law, in the Province of New York, in 1735. and it averred that the able counsel who defended him, A Strange kind of Economy .-- No matter for the never decied the existence of the common law there .--On our suggesting to the Mercury that we were discussing Massachusetts, not New York, law,-it has now produced new proof to sustain its position, and here it

George the IVth often quoted this phrase, act upon it as the majesty of the King, the dignity of

The answer of the House of Representatives, refusing to take any steps in the affair, contains the following

'The liberty of the press is the great bulwark of the liberty of the people. It is, therefore, the incumbent duty of those who are constituted the guardians of the people's rights, to defend and maintain them. This House, however, as one branch of the Legislature, in which capacity alone they have any authority, are ready to discountenance an ABUSE of this privilege. whenever there shall be occasion for it. Should the proper bounds of it at any time be transgressed, to the prejudice of individuals, OR THE PUBLIC, it is their opinion, at present, that provision is already made for the punishment of offenders in the com-mon course of the law."

Here then is the law, or more properly, the only proof of the existence of a law, which the Mercury offers, as the authority by, and under color of which, our judges have dared to doom men to dungeons for of questions, purposely frivolous and rude; still the re- exercising their constitutional liberty of the press. Let us look at this law, it is the best, aye, all that can be offered to sustain the usurpations of the Bench. Gov. Bernard, a crown Governor, complains that he has been libelled in the Boston Gazette, and asks the legislature to act upon it as the dignity of the Government might require. If the common law libel law had existed in the province, by which the Courts could send the libeller (as and thanks ! The Mercury of February 23, says :-"We know that the common law was expressly excluded from the Province by the declaration of rights under the first charter, made in 1641." The Bill of Rights here referred to by the Mercury

" It is therefore ordered by this court and the authority thereof, that no man's life shall be taken away, no man's honor or good name shall be stained, no man's person shall be arrested, restrained, banished, dismembered, nor in any way punished, no man shall be deprived of his wife or children, no man's goods or estate shall be taken away from him, nor any way damient Store adjoining, which has been improved for a nuber of years as a W. The Mercury, as every candid person must do, admits that this declaration of rights expressly excluded the common law from the Colony. It must follow then that a like declaration in our present Constitution would exclude the common law from this Commonwealth .-That declaration is in the the tenth article of our Bill of Rights as follows :-

STITUTIONAL REPRESENTATIVE BODY HAVE GIVEN THEIR ASSENT.

Our Constitution not only thus secures to the people the right of being governed by such laws only as those to which their constitutional representative body has given their assent, but the judiciary are expressly prohibited in that instrument from exercising legislative powers; and hence in all cases, not only of libel but of every other offence, the judges are bound to find the statute under which they assume their jurisdiction of the act. To exercise a common law jurisdiction over crimes in any case, is to violate the fundamental and express provision of our constitution; and sure we are that the people will not longer tamely submit to the gross usurpations of the judiciary on these subjects.

They will hold that branch of the Government up to the line of the law, and not permit a body of dictators to deprive men of their legal rights and their personal liberty, and to brand them with infamy at their good will and pleasure. A case or two of impeachment would be very salutary, but what will be more effective is to root up the whole rotten mass -to eradicate the system, and to establish a judiciary of a more limited tenure, conforming to the genius of our institutions. The present judiciary system of the State is an excrescence upon the body politic-a mere deformity-painful to the sight, oppressive to the citizen-it utterly fails to answer the ends of its institution, and unless it is lopped off, it will taint and corrupt the whole body politic .-Our fathers waged war with the king of England, for outrages not greater in principle than our judiciary commit; the imprisonment of men in violation of law.

In discussing this case, involving great constitutional principles and the liberty of the citizen, we regret to see the able Editor of the Mercury descending to a quibbling style worthy only of a village pettifogger.

> STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS. Washington, April 4, 1836.

Dr Reynolds delivered an able and eloquent discourse on Saturday evening, in the Representatives' Hall, on the subject of an expedition for exploring the South Seas, under the patronage of government. His talents, enterprise, experience and genius, eminently qualify him for taking the lead in such an expedition-the advantages of which to the country, were most satisfactorily exhibited, and I may say, demonstrated in his address. The subject is now before Congress, and I trust they will make a favorable report. I hope the present administration may be signalized by fitting out the first marine expedition set on foot since the commencement of the government. We have all the means, and all the inducements of interest and honor, to prosecute the undertaking.

Clay and Buchanan had a little sparring in the Senate on Saturday evening, originating in Clay's besetting sin, to joke to the very verge of blackguardism, when it can be done with impunity, and when it supplies his lack of argument. It is very evident to the most careless observer, that he has constantly borne Buchanan a grudge, from the first moment he took his seat in the Senate; though perhaps it has been forgotten by many, that the cause originated in the Presidential election of 1824-5, when "bargain, intrigue, and management," were the order of the lay, and when it unfortunately fell to the lot of Ruchanar to be a nuncio from Clay's party to General Jackson, to inquire whom he should place in his cabinet in case of his election. His characteristic answer every body knows-"If a hair of my head knew, I would pluck it out," said the uncompromising soldier, jealous of his honor. Eleven years have since passed away; but the part Buchanan bore in the drama, is not at least forgotten by Clay. Hence his ire, disguised under low and ribald jests. But the moment came, at last, when Buchanan was determined to bear his ribaldry no longer. After several cuts and thrusts, in which Buchanan got the laugh upon Clay, who was not disposed to give up-Buchanan, in a grave manner, said the Senator was very ready to give jokes, but did not seem to understand how to take them; that it was his intention to treat every Senator on that floor with respect; but if the Senator from Kentucky supposed he did not know what was due to himself, he was mistaken. [Here Clay rose to explain.] No, sir, said B., I don't wish any explanation. [Clay said-then take your own course.] I shall, continued B., and I inform the Senator, that I shall at all times be ready to defend myself here or elsewhere, regardless of consequences.

The Senate, during this scene, was as still as death. Clay made no reply. And mark me, hereafter he will never dare to utter to Buchanan any language but that of respect.

Senate.-The Arkansas Bill passed to be engrossed, with only six dissenting voices, viz. Clay, Knight, Porter, Robbins, Prentiss, and Swift. Prentiss said a few words about slavery, but abolition was no go. So the two Bills, Michigan and Arkansas, went to the House, through which they will pass in the course of a week or two, I

Mr Leigh, the Logocrat, made half of his expunging speech to-day. It was one of the ablest failures he has made this session. It was certainly a very labored trifle. I dare say it has cost him a month's labor. He displayed a deal of knowledge that had no bearing on the subject, all English, but he never deigned to touch upon a single American authority or precedent in the case. The upshot of the matter is, the infamous Resolution will be expunged as soon as the debate is finished, provided there is an administration majority not instructed to vote against the meas-

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.

Hartford, April 5, 1836.

Dear Sir-The examination of General Cushman or his preliminary trial before a Court of Enquiry, has been adjourned to the 4th of day of August next. Soon after the court was opened this morning, the counsel of General C. moved to have trial egain postponed, in consequence of his non-attendance. The reasons assigned by the counsel, Messrs Hungerford and Parsons, were two-fold-the health of Mr C., who, it was proved, was lying ill at Wells River, Vt., and the absence of several important witnesses. The reasons being deemed sufficient by the court, it was accordingly adjourned, as I have before stated. A large number of witnesses were present, together with the young lady, her father and brother. Several carious facts were developed in the course of a partial examination of two or three witnesses, which I may have occasion to speak of hereafter. Suffice it to sny, however, that the testimony, so far as it went, only increased the mystery which seems to hang ever

I was in hopes to have obtained more full returns from Fairfield and New London, to have forwarded by this mail; but its early departure, owing to the arrival of the mail south of New York, by Steam Boat-the first time for many weeks-prevents. I have a letter from New Haven saying that Fairfield county gives over 500 majority for Edwards-two of the three Senatorsand 16 of the 30 Representatives, Democratic. Hartford, April 7, 1836.

Dear Sir .- The mail having arrived much earlier than usual, renders it necessary for me to close the accompanying list. Returns enough, have however, been received, to enable me to state with full confidence that seventeen of the twenty-one Senators elected are democrats, and that nearly two thirds of the me bers of the House of Representatives are of the same political character. I forward you the returns from 121 towns, in which, Edwards has 18 802 - Tomlinson 15.757 majority for Edwards, 3 045. The towns which remain to be heard from gave Edwards 161 majority last year -- so that the democratic majority cannot fall short of THREE THOUSAND, which is an increase from last year.

The Connecticut Election .- We congratulate our democratic friends in Connecticut upon the Glorious Victory which has crowned their efforts -we congratulate them on the fact that the "sound and healthy majority" of 1835 remains unimpaired, and that the good sense and sound discretion of the citizens of that cracy of this State to the noble triumph of their by S. brethren in Connecticut-and we call upon them to buckle on their armor, and by like exertions achieve a similar victory.

Washington, April 5, 1836. Of the North Carolina Election it may not be out of order to say a word. It must be evident to all, that nothing was easier than to have given Mr Newland his seat, taking the case, as the Whigs put it, on party grounds. But the whole delegation of his State, friends and all, voted against Newland. Why was this? The Whigs say his party did not dare sustain him; but his friends say, they did not intend to put it in the power of their foes to insinuate the slightest suspicion against their impartiality and integrity. The Whigs say Newland cannot be re-elected; the Democrats say they will try it. Here we will leave them. And now I will take the liberty to make a suggestion on the mode of

THE STATE AND PROPLE'S BANKS.

[House of Representatives, Friday, April 8 .- The first question in order was on the motion of Mr Sheafe, of Lowell, that the Attorney General Le directed to cause process to issue against the State and People's Banks, to appear before the Supreme J. Court, and show cause why their charters should not be annulled.

The second question was on the motion of Mr Buckingham, to adopt the minority of six report, recommending that no further proceedings be had against the banks.

The third question was on the acceptance of the nominal majority report, recommending the annulling of the charters.]

Mr Walcott, of Hopkinton, would have the law enforced, because it was apparent upon the face of the transactions of the banks, that they had not sinned through ignorance; and what was still worse, he had good authority for saying that the condemned practices were not discontinued. One bank, within 20 miles of Boston, which had been investigated established in 1770, and is called the Grenville act, by the committee, but had not been selected for censure, had returned to the system of nominal exchanges, and getting thereby 9 per cent. He therefore hoped, tary history for this, and another bill "for the more the banks remember more than a week or ten days. A regular payment of the Navy," passed in 1757.) Mr Kinsman, of Boston, was opposed to the annul-

Mr Buckir gham, of Cambridge, was opposed to Mr desirable that the question should be decided as soon as ossible. To commence a suit against the banks, would be to hang the subject up from one to six years, to be pecked at term after term. Mr Buckingham regarded the taking away of the charters as a punishment beyond all comparison exceeding the offence, and he anticipated great embarrassment to the business of the mmunity in executing the measure.

Mr Brigham, of Boston, was opposed to requiring an acknowledgment from the banks, that they had violated the law, but was in favor of annulling their charters, and for that purpose submitted the following order :-

Ordered, that the several reports relative to the State structions to report a bill to repeal the charters of the State Bank, and the People's Bank, from and after the first day of December next, and also a resolve expressing an opinion, that the course pursued by certain other banks is illegal, and, if persisted in, that their charters should be forfeited.

Mr Leavit, of Boston, moved to amend the instructions by striking out the first part thereof.

Mr Billings, of Conway, said that the reports had been so harnessed up with amendments, that he did not know where to begin to unbuckle-he would not go the wrong.
